New Fiction from Hong Kong, China Aims at Worldwide Audience Interested in Asia

What would you think of a story with Asian culture elements but expressed softly, funnily and excitedly? Meng Qi, the author of Dragon Phoenix Blog, recalled his discussion with the other two authors years ago. “Dragon Phoenix Blog is a sunshine novel with liveliness, love and peace. It also represents the latest Asian thinking – growing positively with home country identification instead of feeling sad or shame for inadequate areas.”

Breaking the record of the world’s youngest doctor (17 years old), Dragon & Phoenix got a MD degree from Harvard and Stanford at the young age of fifteen. Well, it is nothing special as they are the descendants of the two cleverest men in the Chinese history.

Witnessed by the two Great Monks in Phuket, Dragon & Phoenix meet and join hands to rescue people from the tsunami. In line of the Master Monk’s saying – “What goes in, what comes out,” these two brilliant boys begin their extraordinary life journey...

Meng Qi further commented their ideas behind Dragon Phoenix Blog, “We believe that Asia is definitely the coming star in cultural arts. Books, films and other fine arts from Asia will attract eyes all over the world. However, what currently most available or known about Asia in western communities are old stereotyped images of Asia. They are outdated, hard and dark sided.”

“Understandings of Asian culture are the key for the world’s peace and bright evolutions. The most appropriate way to achieve it is ‘doing it softly, interestingly and heartedly.’”

“We are proud of having great insights on rising Asia cultural arts and committed to the great vision in this work. Dragon Phoenix Blog is our first step in achieving our goals by fictions with fun and love. We have the mission of having a world famous novel originated from Asia with the collaboration of different writers all over the world.”

“Dragon Phoenix Blog brings to the world the message of China’s Renaissance in the 21st Century. Though Hong Kong is regarded as the Desert of Culture and we have little talent and less learning, we believe the Heaven’s arrangements are very special. We completed this book with utterly fearless spirits to pass the great message from Hong Kong throughout the seven continents of the world, just like at the last chapter of Chang Qu Reunion, Phoenix at the worst school passed the firefly ‘Big Dipper’ in his hand to Fujimoto Miho to light up her heart, the Colosseum and the world at the end.”
